Tropes appearing in No Such Thing As Werewolves: All Myths Are True: Werewolves are real, and the Egyptian Gods are real. Ancient Artifact: The pyramid housing The Mother. It's so old even she doesn't know who built it. Back from the Dead: If you're successfully infected by the virus, you'll die and then be resurrected.

No Such Thing As Werewolves (Literature) - TV Tropes

The plot's obvious connection to the game of Werewolf seems like it will be helpful right up to the point that some kind of assumption gets exploited to sneak something past the reader. I'm especially thinking about faked deaths here. That would normally be out of the question for Werewolf, but it's such a common mystery trick.

There's No Such Thing as Werewolves - Let's Play Raging ...

This partly boils down to the disease that the werewolf carries when the human is in wolf form; he is no longer in control, no longer human, and instincts guide him to attack anything and everything living. The human in werewolf form is not to blame because he would have no recollection of the events that took place while he was a werewolf.

There Are No Such Thing's As Werewolves. Ari. Leah McCall. I took a seat in between Lydia and Allison on the cold and hard metal bleachers. I gripped my brown leather coat around me more tightly as a gust of wind blew past. A shrieking blare of a whistle filled the air catching me from my thoughts and turning my attention to the field.
